Meta AI : What is Gangstalking?

During this AI Session, the question was asked several times with a degree of variety in the replies including a translated to Spanish response.

Noteworthy, There was no anti-gangstalking responses stating gangstalking was not real and was a mental illness psychosis, which it is not. Very much real.

There are blind carbon copies within the outgoing addressing of this email.

Shane on you all for standing back on the sides to what them successfully hate on me.

This list is of known persons to whom I have reached out to as a victim of a crime as a targeted individual of Gangstalking since the registration of <http://fuckeduphuman.net> in June of 2005. These tactics are still being expressed in my weekly world that the gangstalking has not terminated. A distribution email CC continues to these people:

The Phenomenology of Group Stalking (‘Gang-Stalking’): A Content Analysis of Subjective Experiences

Lorraine Sheridan,^{1,*} David V. James,² and Jayden Roth¹

3. Results

3.1. Length of Stalking

None of the writers of the narratives described their experiences as having ended. All 50 authors stated or implied that they had been gang stalked for lengthy periods of time (e.g., one mentioned being seen by seven psychologists during the period of being targeted, another described having been targeted whilst living in three different countries). The shortest case was described as having begun “in the last few months” and the longest as continuing for “more than 22 years”.

Linguistic Analysis of Online Communication About a Novel Persecutory Belief System (Gangstalking): Mixed Methods Study

Monitoring Editor: Rita Kukafka

Reviewed by Jun Wen Tan

Results

The gangstalking forum served as a site of discursive contest between 2 opposing worldviews. One is that gangstalking is a widespread, insidious, and centrally coordinated system of persecution employing community members, figures of authority, and state actors. This was the dominant discourse in the study corpus. The opposing view is a medicalized discourse supporting gangstalking as a form of mental disorder. Contributors used linguistic practices such as presupposition, nominalization, and the use of specialized jargon to construct gangstalking as real and external to the individual affected. Although contributors generally rejected the notion that they were affected by mental disorder, in some instances, they did label others in the forum as impacted/affected by mental illness if their accounts if their accounts were deemed to be too extreme or bizarre. Those affected demonstrated a concern with accumulating evidence to prove their position to incredulous others.

Conclusions

The study found that contributors to the study corpus accomplished a number of tasks. They used linguistic practices to co-construct an internally coherent and systematized persecutory belief system. They advanced a position that gangstalking is real and contested the medicalizing discourse that gangstalking is a form of mental disorder. They supported one another by sharing similar experiences and providing encouragement and advice. Finally, they commiserated over the challenges of proving the existence of gangstalking.
